Traumatic Brain Injury (TBI)

I was a bit apprehensive about going into the dive chamber, since it was a treatment that was not widely known. My doctors at the Veterans Administration were hesitant to believe that such a treatment, historically used for other ailments, would work for a TBI. Dr Zant and the rest of the staff were more than helpful with all of my questions and concerns prior to entering the chamber. Upon entering the chamber I felt confident these dives would work in curing or curbing my symptoms.

In late 2006 in Al-Anbar province, Iraq I was knocked unconscious by a Rocket Propelled Grenade that impacted near me. I was later diagnosed with a traumatic brain injury. After forty Hyperbaric Oxygen treatments (dives) my short term memory has returned and I haven't had a headache since about the second week of treatments. In addition, I am able to get a full nights sleep as well as being able to concentrate enough to read a book or magazine for longer than ten minutes. I believe the hyperbaric oxygen treatments are a critical part in helping me win back my life.
